BOE debates classified pay scales

By Abigail Whitehouse
Staff Writer

Discussions concerning classified employee salaries heated up during Monday night's Casey County Board of Education meeting.

After conducting an analysis of Casey County's classified salary pay scales in comparison to 12 other districts with similar demographics, Casey County School Superintendent Marion Sowders recommended that the board increase the pay scales which he found to be lower than the average of the districts combined.

"When you look at those, the breakdown of what we currently pay versus the year-one average of those 12 districts and the year-20 average for each category, a lot of what we were paying starting out was equivalent or comparable to those districts," Sowders said. "Where we fell short were those middle to late year employees on that top scale. You'll notice a bigger difference between where they started and where they ended."

For example, with some salaried positions there is only a 70 cent difference between a new hire and an employee with 30 years on the job.

"I broke down how many people we have in each position, how many years of experience they have, and what the additional cost would be to our general fund, special ed fund, food service fund, and our grant fund. You'll notice that a lot of the positions listed we do have several employees with that high year experience. Keep in mind that when those people choose to retire that you'll hire people at the lower rate," Sowders said.

Using the averages, Sowders reminded the board that he was not using top-end numbers.

"I think that we have to remain competitive with what we pay our employees for doing a great job," Sowders said. "We're a very successful district and a high performing district, and in order to maintain and keep building on that we have to keep good people because good people is what it's about. It's not about programs, it's not about stuff, it's about our people and I think our people need some extra incentive to stay. When we rank 166th out of 171 districts, I think we can do better than that."

Budget concerns

Board member Marilyn Coffey expressed her concern with increasing classified pay scales without definitive evidence that the money is there to cover the costs.

"So in essence, we're looking at the possibility of $147,656 coming out of the general fund," Coffey said.

Chairman Ken Coffman asked the board if the money was currently in the budget. Sowders said there was $50,000 in the working budget.

"So we're basically talking another $100,000," Coffman said.

The timing of the issue was also a concern to Coffey.

"I'm a little concerned about it," she said. "It's not that I don't think people deserve raises, they do. But I'm concerned that we're doing it in October and not the first of the year. We're three months into the year and we're changing things. We have to come up with the extra $100,000 somewhere, it's not even in the working budget."

Sowders responded that there are places where money can be pulled.

"I think this should be a priority for our staff," he said.

While clarifying that she is not opposed to the issue, Coffey reminded the board that staffing cuts were recently made.

Sellers wins 2015 DYW title

By Abigail Whitehouse
Staff Writer

Karey Sellers has been tap dancing since she was 3 and Saturday evening her feet never failed her as she tapped her way to the top and won the title of Casey County's 2015 Distinguished Young Woman.

"I wasn't nervous," Sellers said. "I was more excited than anything. I love performing on stage, especially at Lights of Liberty since I've danced there a lot."

LOL was packed with people eager to watch the DYW performances, according to co-director Angela King who said tickets sold out.

"We had a really good turnout," King said. "We sold 150 tickets but we had some more seats available so I'd say there were around 175 people in attendance."

King said the girls had a great

Whitfield honors local leaders

By Larry Rowell
Editor

Two long-time Casey County political leaders were honored for their years of service at a town hall gathering on Friday at City Hall.

Kentucky Republican Congressman Ed Whitfield, who represents Casey County as part of the First Congressional District, presented Mayor Steve Sweeney and County Judge-Executive Ronald Wright flags that had been flown over the U.S. Capitol building in Washington.

"I asked that these flags be flown over the Capital in honor of Mayor Steve Sweeney and Judge Ronald Wright in appreciation of the many contributions that they made to this area," Whitfield said.

Casey County Attorney Thomas M. Weddle Jr. also paid tribute to Sweeney and Wright.

"Throughout the time period they've been here, I've watched them on several projects and they both worked together. It's not 'what can I get' but 'what can we get?' I'm not so sure that Congress couldn't take a lesson from these two men," Weddle said.

Sweeney and Wright, who both have 16 years in their respective offices, are not seeking re-election in November.

Obamacare

Whitfield wasted no time in blaming the Obama administration for the sluggish economic recovery from the recession.

"Most experts agree that it's been slow is so much uncertainty that's been caused by policies of this administration — specifically the dramatic changes in health care. Companies try to decide how and where to invest, and whether to invest. There's so many unanswered questions and many companies have gone from full time employees down to part time employees because they want to get below that 50 employee threshold so that they don't have to abide by Obamacare," he said.

Rusty Tungate, CEO of Casey County Hospital, asked Whitfield about changes to Obamacare occurring should Republicans take control of the U.S. Senate beginning next year.

"We've tried to repeal it a number of times and I don't have to tell you health care is extremely complex. Dr. Cassidy, a (Republican) member of Congress who's running for the Senate, and other doctors are working with health care providers on a program that if we are able to repeal Obamacare that we would put that in to help improve the system," Whitfield said, adding that should Congress repeal Obamacare, the president would likely veto the measure.

"I don't know if we'd have enough votes to override the veto," he said.

EPA and coal

Whitfield said that he doesn't deny the reality of climate change.

However, as chairman of the Energy and Power Subcommittee on Capital Hill, Whitfield does object to what he calls the administration's "extreme positions" on imposing restrictions on coal plants which produce electricity.

"Our CO2 emissions today are lower than they've been in 20 years. Kentucky has a lot of coal to produce its electricity but more importantly this is an issue that affects the entire country and we, because of regulations in this administration, have less flexibility than other countries in the world," he said.

Whitfield noted that while Europe gets 22 percent of its energy from wind and solar sources, they

Community should have both movie options

After reading the article over concerns about Lights of Liberty versus Casey County Public Library, is there really that much competition to warrant the library to take out a service that has been provided to our community for several years, regardless of it's free or not?

Any given Saturday, Lights of Liberty has more to attend their business at virtually the same time as the library's movie. Being a patron of both businesses, I like Liberty and the surrounding community to have the option of more than one. Have there not been numerous articles about how Lights of Liberty has helped our community? I do agree with this. At the same time, the library's movies have helped our community as well.

Our community needs to have both options in order to thrive, not limit our options because that turns away business in general.

Road rage, air rage: a common cause?

The driver cut in front of me, honking his horn while sticking his middle finger out his car window, pointing it in my direction.

"What's he so mad about?" I remember asking myself.

I had apparently failed to move fast enough when the light for the right-turn lane signaled green.

That wasn't the first time someone had so visibly disapproved of my driving. I admit I'm not NASCAR driving material. I once had a friend tell me that driving with me was like being a passenger with Mr. Magoo at the wheel.

But I somehow felt that if the road rage guy could have met me, maybe let me buy him a cup of coffee, he wouldn't have been so enraged.

It's easier to lash out at people when we depersonalize them.

I'm not the best shopping cart driver either. I'm sure I've been guilty of blocking an aisle without realizing it, and several times I've almost collided into another shopper as I've turned a corner too quickly. But I've never had anyone in the grocery store gesture to me like the road rage guy did. In the supermarket, we work it out with a simple smile and an "Excuse me."

I suspect the same is true for the recent incidents of air rage on commercial flights.

In one instance, a man was using the Knee Defender, a small plastic device that airplane passengers can use to keep the person seated in front of them from reclining their seat. The flight attendant asked the man using the Knee Defender to remove it. When he refused (at 6 ft. 2 in. tall he said if the person in front of him reclined, he couldn't use his laptop), the passenger in front of him threw a glass of water on him. That flight from Newark to Denver was diverted to Chicago.

Another flight from Miami to Paris was diverted to Boston when one man began screaming at the passenger in front of him because of the reclining seat.

A lady on a flight from New York to Palm Beach, Fla., decided to relax by doing a little knitting (How do you get knitting needles on a plane?) and reclined her seat.

But the lady in the seat behind her had rested her head on the tray table. She didn't appreciate being smacked on the head with the reclining seat. A shouting match ensued, and the plane was diverted to Jacksonville, Fla.

I'm not a frequent flyer, but I've flown enough to know traveling by air is no fun anymore. By the time passengers take their seats, they've waited through a security line, removed their shoes, had their belongings checked, submitted to a scan and in some cases been patted down, boarded a crowded plane and quickly squeezed into a seat with limited space. (Airlines are packing more seats on planes, shrinking the space for travelers.)

Air rage is just waiting to happen.

Both road rage and air rage have this much in common: They require a degree of depersonalization.

I've never read about an airline passenger screaming at the person seated next to them because someone invaded their elbow space. It's easier to imagine evil motives in that person seated in front or behind you that you can't see than it is in the person whose shoulder touches yours.

When someone cuts you off in traffic, passing by you in a blur or hidden behind tinted windows, they can easily become a jerk, plain and simple, rather than what they might really be were you to meet them in the grocery store: a frazzled single mom perhaps or maybe an exhausted construction worker too tired to pay attention.

The man who used the Knee Defender later admitted he had not handled his anger appropriately, told his sons he wanted to be a better father, and encouraged them to learn from his failure. And the lady whose head rested on the tray later said she was overly emotional because two of her dogs had just died.

If passengers could see their agitators as people — people with dogs and cats, and children, people who have failed and want to do better — perhaps they would be slower to get angry and quicker to be kind and gentle.

I hope people remember that when they see me getting in the driver's seat of my car.

Them birds still fly fast overheard me telling employee Eric Pruner that I needed some shotgun shells.

Mark went out to his truck and found two boxes of 20 gauge shells which his daughter had not used during an opening day hunt. Thanks, Sara Ruth. And, he sold them to me at last year's price. Even better.

I also had to purchase a hunting license and thought it was going to cost $20. Mark told me that yes, the license was $20 but I also needed a migratory bird license that was an additional $15.

While it may have been tempting to just purchase the $20 part, now that I knew this was law, even though I grumbled a bit, I shelled out the $35. Glad Mark knew what he was talking about.

If I'd been caught and cited by a Fish and Wildlife officer, my name would have been in The Casey County News under Police News.

The point I'm making is this. I live in Campbells-ville and could have gone into a big box store to purchase shells.

If the shells weren't in stock, do you think an employee or store manager would have done for me what Mark Beard did? Hardly.

Thanks, Mark, for the shells, counsel on the license, and going the extra mile for a customer.

When Abigail and I, along with four others got to the undisclosed location of the dove field, there were birds everywhere, and I do mean everywhere. I write undisclosed because if I told you, then I'd have to..., oh I can't, I'm out of shells.

I got to my stand in the field, loaded my gun, looked up and three doves were up high right in front of me.

Throwing the shotgun stock to my shoulder, I swung on the lead bird and squeezed the trigger.

Lo and behold, the bird tumbled out of the sky but fell across the road, where he was lost forever.

Even late in the afternoon it was hot, and it took me about an hour to run through all my shells.

The final count was 10 birds down with six in the bag. With Mark's 50 shells, I had found another 50 shells to use. Ten birds with 100 shells? Not good, but it was worth it.

Although I had a ball, it was also frustrating to sit there and watch birds continue to come into the field and me sitting there with no shells.

Oh, and Abigail? That young woman hunts with an over-under 12 gauge and she's a dove killing machine.

One of the men we hunted with dropped 13 birds with his first 15 shots. If I divulge his name, it might be embarrassing to him and I wouldn't do that to Gerry Wethington for all the tea in China.

A great time was had by all and I'm satisfied with the results after all these years.

Now, if I can just get Gerry to cook some of those doves and drop them by the office.

smaller group, 'The Favorites Committee.' Now we don't really have a 'Favorites Committee' in Frankfort, but I think it might help you understand. Now we need the powerful chairman or madame chairman of the 'Favorites Committee.' Great!"

From there I remind them that the chairman decides what bills get heard, which means he or she is very powerful. This is also similar to leadership on the floor. Then I have them nominate favorite football teams, basketball teams, food, etc. One time when I was speaking to a group of fourth graders, they did favorite toys. Unfortunately, this chairman was pretty tough and did not allow a vote on about half the toys. One toy that was wiped from the board belonged to another child who was not happy about the removal and burst into tears (trust me, I know the feeling.) In the end, most children understand the importance of working together, but also the importance of being the one in a position of leadership.

I have had to go through this on many bills, but one in particular was House Bill 34 from the 2014 Legislative Session.

This bill has had different bill numbers in different years, and has changed a little, but basically is a tightening of the DUI laws. I was approached several years ago by someone who had lost his grandson to a repeat DUI offender and though he knew he could never get his grandson back, he hoped that no one else would go through what he went through.

We sat down with a bill drafter and crafted a bill that was tighter than current laws, but which we felt had a good chance of clearing the process. Unfortunately, the chairman has promised year after year to hear the bill, but always waits until the end of session and then says, "Sorry, we are out of time." The power of the majority is important.

That's not to say that when you are in the minority, you never accomplish a thing because I have in the past.

But usually I have had to ask for help in the Senate, because the power of the majority in the Senate is the same party as mine. But even their assistance is limited.

When you're in the minority, you spend much more time defending, stopping bad legislation than advancing good legislation. In the end the power of the majority determines leadership, and leadership controls what bills get heard.

So when you think about what goes on in Frankfort (or Washington as well), remember that the power of the majority has a lot to do about our direction as a state and country.

Outhouse Blowout is Saturday

By Abigail Whitehouse
Staff Writer

The Great Outhouse Blowout event is back and this year the fun is free for all.

Instead of charging an admission fee, donations are welcomed, with contributions going toward maintaining the Historic Penn's Store in Gravel Switch, where the annual event is held each year. Those who make a donation are automatically entered into various door prizes.

Jeanne Penn Lane, store owner and director of the event, has created a new, unique way to intrigue local communities to join in on the fun.

"We've hidden miniature wooden outhouses at various sponsor locations in surrounding areas of Danville, Campbellsville, Lebanon, and Liberty. If you find one, give the business owner your information (name, phone number, etc.), bring your mini outhouse to the Blowout and you'll receive a free T-shirt," Lane said.

Continuous entertainment from 10 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. is promised for the event, which takes place on Saturday, Sept. 13. With several bands providing live music, people attending are invited to bring their own instruments and join in the instrumental jams throughout the day.

Several local vendors will be present and offering a variety of family-friendly fun.

"We really appreciate all of our sponsors and contributors over the years," Lane said. "They've been really supportive. They know, especially after the flood, this is our main fundraiser to get back and keep the store going."

Trademark contests such as the Outhouse Bachelor contest for women and the Ugly Legs Contest for men will take place, along with the biggest event of all, the 'Great Outhouse 300 Race.'

This year, a heated rivalry has developed between Kentucky and Tennessee within the world of Outhouse Racing. A few Tennessee teams will be traveling to Gravel Switch to compete against Kentucky racers.

"As of now, I know of seven teams that have signed up," Lane said.

For those not rolling down the road in outhouses on wheels, there will be plenty of activities to occupy your time.

From book authors to puppet shows, musicians and more, the Great Outhouse Blowout of 2014 will go on come rain or shine.

"It's creative and country," Lane said. "No matter how much I plan the event, it always seems to take on a life of it's own."

The event is Saturday, Sept. 13 from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and is located at Penn's Store, 257 Penn's Store Road, Gravel Switch. For more information call (859) 332-7706 or email pennsstore@aol.com.

"Last year, 53 percent of our coal exports went to Europe," he said. "So here we have the greenest area of the world with more renewable energy anywhere going back to coal because natural gas prices are so high."

Although the president says that America has an "all of the above" energy policy using coal, natural gas, and renewable resources, his actions speak louder than his words, Whitfield said.

"Because of his administration, we cannot build a new plant in America because the emissions standards set by the EPA are so stringent that the technology isn't available to meet the standards. But what's worse, in June 2015, the EPA's coming out with new regulations on existing coal plants in America. The EPA has already identified 15 coal units in Kentucky that will have to be closed by 2020," Whitfield said.

Asked about the University of Kentucky's football team beating a Southeastern Conference foe this year, Whitfield went on record that the Cats will beat the Vanderbilt Commodores when they meet in Lexington on Sept. 27.

it brings visions of colorful leaves, cooler temperatures and wonderful Kentucky fall foods, such as sweet potatoes and apples. Not only are these foods delicious, but they are jam-packed with nutrients.

Apples and sweet potatoes are two of nature's great nutritional gifts, and even the wrapping is edible. They are low in calories, fat, and sodium. They are cholesterol free and are an excellent source of fiber. They also contain many of the phyto-chemicals that research shows may play an important role in preventing disease.

Studies show that eating apples, sweet potatoes, and other high-fiber fruit and vegetables may help with weight control. Fiber add to a feeling of fullness and helps slow down the rate at which sugar is released into the bloodstream, which helps keep blood sugar levels steady.

More than 2,500 varieties of apples are found in the United States. Several of these varieties are grown in Kentucky including Red Delicious, Rome, Winesap, Gala, Jonathan, Cortland, and Golden Delicious.

Look for firm, crisp, well colored fruit.

Avoid apples with shriveled skins, bruises, worm holes, or decayed spots. Always handle apples gently to avoid causing bruises, blemishes, or other defects.

Kentucky grows two kinds of sweet potatoes. They are divided by color — dark orange and pale yellow or white — and have either moist or dry flesh. Choose small to medium-sized potatoes with smooth, unblemished skin.

Both apples and sweet potatoes grown in Kentucky are available at markets throughout the state. Apples are available from early summer through December.

Sweet potatoes are available in the fall through the winter.

Apples should be stored in a cool, dry place until they are ripe.

Once they are ripe, store in the refrigerator vegetable drawer in a plastic bag.

Store sweet potatoes unwrapped, in a cool, dry, dark place with good ventilation for up to two months. Do not wash before storing as moisture will cause them to spoil quickly.

Try this recipe that uses both these delicious Kentucky Fall Foods:

Baked Apples & Sweet Potatoes

Buyout leads to Danville restaurant closing

Danville Advocate Messenger

The owner of Reno's Roadhouse accepted a buyout last weekend, leading him to close the doors of his establishment with little notice to employees.

According to Jody Lassiter, president and CEO of Danville-Boyle County Economic Development Partnership, the prospective purchaser of the former Country Hearth Inn property next to Reno's, Newcomb Oil Co. LLC, negotiated with Reno's owner Wendell Spigle to buy out the remaining lease on the building.

With the buyout, the entire tract and the adjacent tract on Denmark Drive will be demolished and redeveloped with new retail businesses.

According to Lassiter, four retail and restaurant prospects already have been referred to Newcomb Oil.

Less than a week ago, Lassiter said Newcomb Oil planned to raze the hotel and split the property into three segments upon the closing of the sale. He also said the company is in the process of working with the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet to gain an easement onto the property from the bypass for better access.

The news comes as little consolation for employees who arrived to work last weekend to find signs on the doors indicating the restaurant on Hustonville Road had closed.

On the employee entrance at the establishment, a note was left saying the restaurant had closed and telling employees when they could pick up their last paycheck.

Man gets 15 years for DUI, manslaughter

Lebanon Enterprise

A Lebanon man was sentenced last week to 15 years for second-degree manslaughter, second-degree assault, DUI first offense and four counts of promoting contraband.

Joseph Spalding, 29, was sentenced to 15 years after pleading guilty to second-degree manslaughter, second-degree assault, DUI first offense and four counts of promoting contraband. Spalding caused a collision that killed William "Billy Jo" Cecil, 40, on Aug. 11, 2013. Joseph M. Spalding, 29, of 516 Valley View Apartments in Lebanon, pled guilty to all the counts against him, and Judge Allan Bertram handed down the sentence Sept. 4 in Marion Circuit Court.

Spalding caused a collision Aug. 11, 2013, that killed William J. "Billy Joe" Cecil, 40, of Finley and injured Cecil's 14-year-old son, Jonathan Blade Cecil. According to the Kentucky State Police, Spalding was driving east in a 2002 Chevy pickup on KY 208 on the night of the collision. Cecil and his son were driving west in a 2012 Polaris Razor ATV when Spalding crossed the center line and collided with them, according to the state police. Cecil died following the collision. His son was treated at Spring View Hospital with non-life threatening injuries.

Judge Bertram handed down a sentence of 10 years for both the manslaughter and the assault charges (to be served concurrently), and Spalding was given five years for the contraband charges. The contraband sentence will be served consecutive to the 10 years he received for manslaughter and assault. His DUI sentence will be served concurrently with his other sentences.

Henderson school district looking at e-books

The Gleaner

Henderson County School Superintendent Marganna Stanley, in one of her first public appearances in her new role, told the Henderson Rotary Club last week the school district is looking at buying digital textbooks.

"We will spend anywhere from $500,000 to $1 million a year on (traditional) textbooks," she said. "It is not cheap. We are looking at going to e-books, to go electronic. "We are glad we have waited a few years, because a few years ago, when that hype really started to come through, they not only charged us almost the same amount ... but then they charged you a fee to have their service, as well. "There's been a lot of competition now in that area, so prices have started to come down. It's much more reasonable. We will continue to look at that option for our kids."

Textbooks are a major expense of the Henderson County School District, but not nearly the expense of salaries, she said. At roughly $40 million, salaries account for 82 percent of the district's budget.

T-shirt, appliance makers could hire 300 in Northern Kentucky

Kentucky Enquirer

Two companies could bring more than 300 jobs in Northern Kentucky after being approved for state tax credits last week.

Teespring Inc., a maker of custom T-shirts used in fundraising and organization campaigns, could lease space in Hebron to bring the majority of production in-house.

TeeSpring is based in San Francisco but also has offices in Rhode Island. The Kentucky Economic Development Finance Authority approved $2.5 million in tax incentives for the proposed $21.9 million investment.

About $16 million of the planned investment would be for equipment.

Initial plans call for hiring 179 workers but the facility could employ nearly 300 within 10 years. The average hourly wage and benefits would be $16.75, according to information submitted to the state.

Teespring allows people to make and sell merchandise online by using a crowdfunding model and by handling production and distribution. The Kentucky finance authority also approved $200,000 in tax incentives to Milwaukee-based A.O. Smith Corp. to expand in Northern Kentucky. A.O. Smith, a manufacturer of residential and commercial water heating equipment, could add new production lines and bolster its operations.

The company could invest $3.3 million in its Northern Kentucky operation and add 12 workers. It currently has a facility at 8160 Holton Drive in Florence. In Florence, A.O. Smith makes coatings for the appliance, automotive, and metallurgical markets that are corrosion and abrasion resistant.

The company said it employed about 44 people currently. The average hourly wage including benefits is $25 an hour.

Beshear bans smoking on most state property starting Nov. 20

Lexington Herald Leader

State workers will have to snuff out their cigarettes starting Nov. 20.

Gov. Steve Beshear announced last week that the state will ban the use of cigarettes and all other tobacco products, including e-cigarettes, on most state property, effective Nov. 20.

That means employees and visitors can't light up or chew tobacco in state-owned or leased buildings, in state-owned vehicles, or on state property — including parking lots, sidewalks and green space under the control of the executive branch of government.

The policy impacts 2,888 state-owned buildings, making more than 26.4 million square feet tobacco-free, Beshear said at a Capitol news conference with Lt. Gov. Jerry Abramson and other state officials.

The state also leases space in 568 other structures, and the Finance Cabinet will work with those landlords to post signs indicating the tobacco-free zones.

Beshear said his executive order has a few exceptions — state parks, the Kentucky Horse Park, Kentucky State Fairgrounds, Bluegrass Station, wildlife management areas, state rest areas, Military Affairs training centers and armories, and certain state residential health facilities.

The order does not apply to universities, but Abramson said all universities except Western Kentucky University and Murray State University already have some form of tobacco limits in place.

Beshear also has no authority to ban smoking on property overseen by the judicial and legislative branches of government, or constitutional officers, but he said he encouraged all of them to follow his example.

All constitutional officers except Agriculture Commissioner James Comer have told him they will abide by the ban, Beshear said. Kentucky is the fifth state to adopt such a policy. The others are Delaware, Oklahoma, Oregon and South Dakota.

State government is the largest employer in Kentucky, and the tobacco-free rule to take effect on the day of the Great American Smokeout will affect about 33,000 state workers, as well as hundreds of thousands of visitors to state offices and properties.

time and the program went very smoothly.

"I think everyone watching really enjoyed it being at the theater with comfy seats," King said. "The program lasted about three hours."

After a 10 minute interview with the judges, a 1950's themed opening number, and a 12-minute fitness routine, Sellers exhibited her tap-dancing talents to the song "Feet Don't Fail me Now," a song which she chose for a specific reason.

"My feet have helped me for so long and I've danced for forever so now was not the time for them to fail me," Sellers said.

Those same feet led Sellers to win the Talent Award, which she had hoped to earn.

The interview portion of the program, which took place at First Christian Church, gave the judges a chance to meet the girls and get to know them, at least as well as they could in the allotted 10 minutes.

"I think some of the girls were nervous about the interview but not all of us," Sellers said. "We all worked really hard for a month before the interview so I think everyone was just really excited."

Traveling to the elementary schools and speaking to young girls across the county helped alleviate some fear in regards to the interview portion.

"It was really good practice for us, just speaking in front of people," Sellers said. "We talked to them about how being a part of the DYW program has helped us see who we really are and how important it is for them to start being their best self now at their age."

As someone who dreams of being an elementary school teacher, Sellers said she really enjoyed talking to the young girls.

"We really had a lot of fun with it," she said. "There are five aspects of being your best self and those are be healthy, be ambitious, be involved, be responsible, and be studious. So we got to talk about all of those things and how we strive to be each of those things in our lives and how those girls can start now and set goals to be their best selves."

Once the interview was behind them, the DYW participants were focused on answering the onstage question, which they had been given the night before to review.

The onstage question that each girl was asked was, "How have the roles of young women changed over the decades since the 1950's?"

While several girls spoke about the changing roles of women, from housewives to working mothers and contributors to household incomes, Sellers took a different approach to answering the question.

"I said that the world has changed dramatically since the 1950s but I don't feel like the roles of young women have changed because a young woman should be honest, healthy, educated, and a good role model," she said. "All of these things were acceptable for women of the 1950's and still are for the women of my generation."

After 14 years of dancing and the esteemed 2015 CCDYW title under her belt, Sellers said she is very excited to continue on the state competition which takes place in January 2015.

"We have orientation in November," she said. "That's when they'll send us all of the information and a video with our dance and fitness routines."

For one week in January, the DYW state participants will stay with a host family and one other participant, all practicing together until Friday and Saturday when they will perform.

"I'll be competing against a totally different group of girls," Sellers said.

If there is one thing the DYW program has done for Sellers, it is strengthen all of her friendships with fellow participants.

"It was really fun to be with all those girls," she said. "That's one thing that I really liked. We were all friends before but this made us even closer."

Sellers wasn't the only girl to walk away with an award. First runner-up was Russell County High senior Morgan Emerson, who performed a lyrical dance to the song "Let it Go."

The second runner-up was CCHS senior Chelsey Lynn, who also performed the song "Let it Go" in the form of a piano solo.

Winner of the Spirit Award, which each of the DYW participants voted on based on who they thought worked really hard, and made the experience special, was Morgan Grant.

"I was really impressed with everyone," Sellers said. "A lot of the girls had never even been on stage in front of all of those people, so everyone really stepped out and did things they had never done before, which is what the DYW is all about."

School Board

"I'm just concerned because we just made some very difficult, heart-rending cuts not too long ago, if you all remember," Coffey said, "and it just concerns me that we're now going to turn around and do this. I'm not saying I'm opposed to it but I have some real concerns about it."

Coffey said that, though she knows she wasn't present to vote, had the board chosen to take the 4 percent tax rate increase, this could have almost been completely covered.

"Again, the message that we send out to our employees is that we're all in this together," Sowders said. "It's not about a job title, it's about everyone pulling their own weight. This is an investment and one worth making and I think it's something we can do."

In agreement but...

Coffman, Edwards, and Turner voiced their agreement that this should be a priority but also that the board needed to make sense of it first before approving the increases.

"Let's dig out the budget a little more, Mr. Sowders, if you don't mind," Coffey said. "You said there are places where we can pull."

Sowders said that with increases in student enrollment and an expected increase in federal funds, the extra money can be found.

"We're trying to do it in a systematic way that addresses our entire pay scale so we don't have this group coming and saying 'I'm worth more than that.' Our classified pay scale just isn't accurate compared to what other districts are paying," Sowders said.

"Deena Randolph (Director of District Wide Services) can tell you where we've got cushion and I think it's doable. Like I said, we've got 25 new students, our SEEK money, and we're also anticipating an increase in Title 1 money Oct. 1 so those are all things that I think we need to consider."

Coffman asked Randolph if the board can come up with the money to cover the costs of the increase.

Randolph said that for the last three years, the board has spent more than they've taken in and projects spending $709,000 more this year than what they will take in, not counting this increase.

Urges caution

"As a steward of taxpayers' money, I have to urge you to be cautious," Randolph said, "because when you do a raise, you're stuck with it. It just keeps building every year. I just urge you to use caution. This will be the fourth year in a row that we'll be spending more than we're taking in."

Despite Randolph's concerns, Sowders said that the board has been frugal with budgetary issues.

"Our tentative budget last year projected a general fund balance carry-over of $2.6 million and the actual carry over June 30 was over $600,000 more than projected," Sowders said. "We were very good stewards of our money last year."

However, Randolph said that more does not always mean discretionary funds are available.

"May I add that those are just budget numbers," Randolph said. "The $2.6 million was budgeted just to be conservative. Yes, we did end the year with more, but it was still $500,000 less than what we took in. You have to differentiate the budget from the action."

Coffey once again urged the board to make sure the funds can be found in the budget.

"Let's make sure we've got the money in the budget to do it," Coffey said. "I'd love to give them all a raise right now, tonight, but I'm not convinced we have the money. I don't want us to have to go back and cut positions and cut days. I want us to think ahead enough that we don't have to do that again."

Sowders reiterated that, for him, the important issue is taking care of the district's classified personnel.

"The only concern that I would have with that statement is that I think we need to think about quality of people we have and not quantity. I think we've got some excellent people who are not being paid for the things that they do day in and day out," Sowders said.

No action was taken as the board considers Sowders' request.

The discussion was tabled and set to be reopened in a special called meeting tomorrow (Thursday, Sept. 11.)

The budget must be approved and submitted to KDE by Sept. 30.

Elementary schools offer school readiness workshops

Jones Park Elementary and Walnut Hill Elementary are offering a free parent workshop series to help local families ensure their young children are prepared for school.

“It’s the simple things that make a difference in building a young child’s foundation for success in school and life,” said Casey County Superintendent Marion Sowders. “It’s not flash cards or expensive educational toys – it’s things like making your grocery trip into a treasure hunt for colors and shapes. Everyday activities are fun, easy opportunities to encourage learning.”

The United Way Born Learning Academy offers

sources to do just that. It’s a series of six free workshops that provide families with young kids additional resources to turn everyday activities into early learning moments. The workshops are at night in each of the schools with food and childcare provided.

Why does early learning matter? Experts say the first few years are one of the most critical times for a child’s development. Kids who get the right learning opportunities in their early years are more likely to graduate high school, go on to college, stay married and be productive citizens.

But kids who come to school without the cognitive, social-emotional, and physical skills needed have a harder time learning basics like reading. By the end of third grade, kids who can’t read on grade level are four times as likely to drop out of high school, research says.

In Casey County 63.1 percent of the children entering kindergarten are not ready for school according to the BRIGANCE screener. In Kentucky 51 percent of the children entering kindergarten are not ready for school.

To attend one of the academies you must register by Oct. 1. For more information and to register, parents and caregivers should contact Jennifer Godbey, 787-7985, if interested in attending Jones

Park and Shelly Wesley, 787-0045, if interested in attending Walnut Hill.

Rebels beat Russell Co. 17-14 on last minute field goal

By Rita "Peat" Harris

The Casey County football team brought out Rebel pride in fans of all ages on Friday as the Rebels took down long-time rival Russell County with a final field goal, winning 17-14.

"We wanted to show everybody who we were and that we have a good football team and can represent our county. Our kids really rallied behind that," said Coach Sam Marple. "We tried to get that point across and just because it's Russell doesn't mean they're better."

The first points did not come until nearly the end of the first half when Collin Miller made a 60-yard run to put the Rebels on the board. Miller would finish the night with 128 yards rushing on 17 carries.

With Luke Patterson's extra point kick, Casey led 7-0 with just under four minutes remaining in the half.

"Even though we went into half time 7-0, it could have been 17-0," said Marple. "We had a few close situations that took a lot of the momentum away from us."

With under 10 minutes to play in the fourth quarter of Friday's gridiron match-up between Casey County and Russell County, kicker Luke Patterson adds a crucial extra point to tie the score at 14. It would again come down to Patterson's leg at the end of the game, as he split the uprights with the game winning field goal, putting the Rebels on top, 17-14. It was Casey's first win over Russell County in 10 years.

The score remained unchanged through the third quarter, but Russell rallied in the final period, starting it off with a 23-yard touchdown. The extra point conversion failed, keeping Casey up by one, 7-6.

Just two minutes later, another successful Laker drive found them in the end zone followed by a two-point conversion. They gained their first lead, 14-7, with 9:41 to play.

"I think the win the week before really helped us. I don't know when Russell County rallied and made their little run if we could have responded," said Marple. "We're constantly telling our kids there is no way to play a good team and not have the momentum swing their way sometimes."

The Rebels responded immediately with Micco Randell returning Russell's kickoff for 80 yards. Patterson added the extra point to even the score at 14-14.

"Micco said he knew if that ball came to him he'd be that spark," Marple said. "You can pause the film on that kickoff return and see ten people blocking somebody. I thought they did a good job overcoming adversity and that's two weeks in a row they've been able to do that."

With the score knotted at 14, Casey had the final drive of the game. By making smart, key plays the Rebels put themselves in field goal range just in time for one final play.

It was Patterson's third field goal attempt of the season and he nailed it, giving Casey the 17-14 victory, their first win over Russell since 2003.

"Everyone had confidence in Luke if we could get inside the 30 yard line," said Marple. "He was 0-2 on the season, and he just walks in there and it's perfect. When you do things the right way, things are going to pay off. Luke's worked hard."

Casey finished with 210 rushing yards, Miller with 128. Although the Rebels were 5 for 12 for 47 yards in the passing game, Marple said it was a key aspect to the win.

"We didn't complete 20 passes or anything but three or four times we got behind the chains and had to throw the ball and made big plays including that last drive to have a chance there at the end."

Jaylan Waddle, Kyle Eads and Gary Propes led Casey's defense with 12, 10 and 9 tackles, respectively. The team racked up 64 tackles.

The Rebels will take a break from play with a bye-week before returning to action on Sept. 19 at Lincoln County.

VolleyRebs win at Lincoln Co.

By Rita "Peat" Harris

After adding a second straight loss to their record, the VolleyRebs got back on the winning track with a victory on Monday. The team is now 7-4 (1-1).

"We want to stay on the winning track," said Coach Veronica Sengkhayong.

Vs. Russell County

Casey started out hot, taking down the Lady Lakers 25-15 in the opening game on Thursday in Russell County; however, the VolleyRebs lost steam and fell 2-1.

Russell (7-3) played Casey close in the second match, fighting for a two-point win, 26-24. While the VolleyRebs put up a fight in the final game, it wasn't enough and they lost 25-20.

Jenna Carman led Casey in points on serve with 10 while Megan Murphy totaled four aces. Cydney Warner and Kelli Wilson had ten kills each. Wilson also had seven passes and seven dinks. Warner had eight blocks.

Vs. Lincoln County

Coming off losses to Pulaski County and Russell County, Casey defeated Lincoln County (3-8) 2-0 on Monday.

Having defeated Lincoln County twice this season, Casey began Monday's game a little loose, but Sengkhayong pulled the reigns in on her team before things got out of control.

"We told them at practice if they weren't going to perform we'd pull them out and put someone else in and that's what we did," she said.

Lincoln went up 7-3 before the coach pulled her starting line-up for two serves. When they returned to the court the score was 9-3, but the starters put up seven straight points to get back in the game and gain a lead.

"I told them you need to go back in and play and when they went back in they were ready to play," said Sengkhayong.

The VolleyRebs went on to win the first match 25-15, and repeated the performance in the second game.

Brookely Davis had nine points on serve, including two aces. Tyra Sengkhayong again led sets with 29. Davis and Murphy each had six passes. Warner had five kills.

"They have worked hard on the practice field and took a couple hard knocks from their first two matches but are starting to see that teamwork and perseverance will pay off," said Pennington.

Casey girls' soccer earned their first season win on Thursday in a district match-up at McCreary Central (0-4). They defeated the Lady Raiders, 3-0.

"CCHS girls soccer is continuing to improve," said Coach Loren Pennington.

The teams battled to put up a goal through the entire first half. While the Lady Rebels failed to connect with the goal, they did keep McCreary Central from getting on the scoreboard.

"The girls turned it up a notch in the second half scoring all three goals," said Pennington.

The first two goals came from Allie McQueary, who scored on two corner kicks.

Casey's final goal came on a pass from Shelby Cook to Cierra Woodrum, who nailed the ball in the back of the net for a 3-0 lead.

Archery deer season opens

The transition to fall is underway.

For Kentucky hunters, it started weeks ago with the opening of early fall squirrel season. Labor Day ushered in the start of dove season, and the onrush of hunting opportunities continues this weekend.

Archery deer and wild turkey seasons opened statewide on Sat., Sept. 6 and runs through Jan. 19, 2015.

The past two deer seasons produced new overall harvest records in Kentucky, and bowhunters helped set the pace for both. September saw record deer harvests the past three seasons.

The deer herd remains in fine shape after a 2013-14 season that saw hunters harvest a record 144,409 animals, and conditions have been favorable for fawn survival.

Turkeys provide another fall hunting opportunity.

A good year of poult production could mean more young turkeys available to hunters, and should lead to improved hunting next spring.

Two variables – the weather and the mast crop – could have big impacts.

Biologists wrapped up their annual mast survey last week and preliminary reports indicate red and white oaks will be better than last year. Hickory nut production appears spotty while American beech nut production generally seems to be poor around the state.

Red and white oak acorns are valued as food sources by deer, turkey and other forest animals.

If this turns out to be a good year for white oaks, key on those because deer prefer them over the bitterer red oak acorns. One way to distinguish a red oak from a white oak is by looking at its leaves. Red oak leaves have pointed lobes while white oaks have rounded lobes.

Wild turkeys aren't as finicky about hard mast, but they will concentrate around acorn-bearing oaks.

Last season's fall turkey harvest was down 39 percent, a drop attributed to extensive rainfall during major hunting timeframes. The two shotgun seasons have accounted for 77 percent of the entire fall turkey harvest over the past decade, Dobey said.

For more information about the deer and fall turkey seasons, including legal equipment and bag limits, consult the 2014-15 Kentucky Hunting and Trapping Guide. It is available online at fw.ky.gov or wherever licenses are sold.

Casey County runners hit the trails at Lincoln County's Patriot Pride run on Saturday where the girls' team took second place overall.

Girls

The Lady Rebel cross country team brought home their first team trophy of the season in their first time running as a full team this season.

"All seventh grade girls and up ran," said Coach Jon Vaughn.

Jenna Vaughn ran 23:45 to take second place while teammate Whitney Clements was just behind her in third place with a time of 24:04.

"Whitney was pushing Jenna through that race. It was awesome to see those two finish second and third," said Vaughn. "All of the girls are capable of really helping us soon and they're all working hard."

And, the girls' second place finish was only five points behind South Laurel who took first.

Laura Cuin, Alyssa Sharp and Evelyn Moore also scored for the Lady Rebels. Casey had ten girls compete in the 5k event.

Casey had one runner compete in the 4K race and two in the 2K. Abby Vaughn won the 2K in a time of 8:58.

Boys

Noah Brown led the Casey boys on Saturday with a ninth place finish and a time of 20:52. Sophomore Chase Williams earned 13th with a time of 21:24.

"Noah did pretty good," Vaughn said, noting the humidity affected all runners' performances. "Chase's shoe came off. He threw it at me with a little over a half mile to go."

While Casey's boys did not earn a top team finish, Vaughn is pleased with the team's potential for the season.

Casey win renews rivalry

Last Friday night was a special one in the Rebel pride tradition and it's not just because Casey defeated the Russell County Lakers, but because of the way it happened and the fact it kept a long-standing rivalry tradition thriving.

Casey has now defeated Russell County three times in the history of the program. I suppose my passion and excitement behind this year's win has to do with the success I saw during my high school days. In fact, it is only thanks to a great high school football experience that I came to even like football.

The first win came in 1999, the final game of Coach Sam Marple's junior season. That win was a turning point in Rebel football history. It may have been the last game of the season, but the momentum and pride from that game carried into the next season where Casey went 6-5 and made it to the play-offs; my freshman year at CCHS.

Russell claimed victory over the next three seasons, the bulk of my high school days. However, Casey had some of its more successful years during that time, including two trips to the playoffs and a 7-3 season in 2002. I experienced it all from a front row seat, traveling with the team, keeping stats.

My senior year we went 4-7 and made it to the plays offs. One of those four wins was a 33-7 triumph over Russell County on our home field. One can't ask for a better senior night than that, right?

I was pretty much out of the loop with Rebel football after graduating and was unaware Russell County fell off our regular schedule after 2008, but was excited to see the rival game return last season, but let's face it, every Rebel fan hated the feeling of a 40-7 loss on our home field.

This year was what Rebel football needed and for more than just the sake of a rivalry. Friday's 17-14 victory was an exciting down-to-the wire game that would have been a fun win, rivalry game or not, but rivalries are a part of something bigger. They are a part of tradition.

Tradition involves more than just players and coaches and the current students. Tradition involves everyone the program has ever touched — people like myself and generations of Rebels before me and all of the parents who have ever had a Rebel or Lady Rebel of their own.

Why do so many love UK basketball? Not because they played UK basketball or even that they attended the University of Kentucky. They love it because of the tradition they feel a part of.

Today's Rebel football program is working hard for wins each season, but more importantly and with a more long-standing effect, they are striving to build and grow a tradition that Rebel fans of today, yesterday and tomorrow can always be feel a part of.

If the last two wins haven't gotten you excited about Rebel football, be excited for our first home game.

The new "Victory Bell" will be ready by then, if not sooner. Players, coaches, parents, students, cheerleaders and fans will be able to celebrate and ring the bell after game victories.

Oh, and did I mention the marching band too? That's right, Casey's marching band is BACK in full force and let's be honest, what's football without a marching band? It adds that special touch to the Friday night lights we all love.

So, who else is ready for Oct. 3 already?

Liberty man charged with giving minors pot

By Larry Rowell
Editor

A Liberty man faces multiple charges including allegedly asking a 15-year-old female teen to sell marijuana.

Tyrus Paul Bragg, 20, of 251 Fair St., Liberty, was arrested on Sept. 3 at his residence by Sheriff Jerry Coffman, Chief Steven Garrett, Officer Richie Francioni, and deputies Chad Weddle and Dennis Allen.

BRAGG

Court records state that Bragg was originally charged with first offense trafficking in marijuana, less than 8 ounces, possession of marijuana, possession of drug paraphernalia, two counts of first-degree unlawful transaction with a minor under 16 years old, illegal controlled substance; and first-degree unlawful transaction with a minor, illegal sex act, under 18 years of age.

However, in Casey District Court the next day, the charges of two counts of first-degree unlawful transaction with a minor under 16 years old, illegal controlled substance; and first-degree unlawful transaction with a minor, illegal sex act, under 18 years of age, were amended down to three counts of second-degree unlawful transaction with a minor.

The arrest citation filed on Sept. 3 states that Bragg admitted to "giving, transferring marijuana to two high school juveniles who attend Casey County High School and are under 15 and 16 years of age."

The citation goes on to state that Bragg admitted to smoking the drug with the teens and giving them marijuana.

Bragg was released from the Casey County Detention Center on Sept. 4 on personal recognizance and is scheduled to be back in Casey District Court on Sept. 18.

Man airlifted to hospital after flipping car

By Abigail Whitehouse
Staff Writer

A Casey County man was airlifted to the University of Kentucky's Medical Center Sept. 3 after he lost control of his vehicle, crashed through a fence, and rolled several times before coming to a stop.

Deputy Chad Weddle said he was westbound on West Ky. 70 at the time of the crash, responding to a call he received stating that Bobby Todd Richards, 24, had run through a woman's yard on Creston Water Tower Road and had fled the scene of the accident.

"I was heading that way to locate his vehicle," Weddle said. "So I was already within 2-3 miles from where the (second) accident happened."

Deputy Weddle said Richards was traveling eastbound on Ky. 70 in a 1992 Oldsmobile when the vehicle left the roadway and traveled approximately 320 ft. before wiping out 90 ft. of a barbed wire fence and rolling four or five times.

the Oldsmobile finally came to a stop, resting upside down in the field.

"He was very intoxicated," Weddle said. "He wouldn't cooperate."

Richards was charged with first offense DUI, as well as possession of an open alcohol beverage container in a motor vehicle, failure of non/owner operator to maintain insurance, and leaving the scene of an accident.

Another Casey County man, Jordan Hatfield, 19, was driving behind Richards when he noticed something was wrong with Richards' car.

"He was all over the road when I was behind him," Hatfield said. "I slowed down quite a bit because I was afraid that something was going to happen."

Hatfield said he was glad he decided to slow down because not long after, he saw Richards leave the roadway and flip several times.
